The Secretary of the Se Vincent, Ostober 22, from Capt. Chauneey, of the United States steam frigate Niagara .-Capt. Chauncey arrived at St. Vincent on the day previous to writing. His object in touchjog at this place was to obtain a small supply of oal, baving been obliged to use steam during the preceding four or five days in consequence of the prevalence of an obstinate south wind, which was constantly setting the vesgel to the northward and eastward, and daily placing her further from the point of destina-

Capt Chauncey reports that on the 14th ultimo seven of the captured Africans died from a complication of diseases, rendered more severe by the unusual cold weather which had lately set in. With this great mortality-forty five deaths since the negress were received on board -- with no prospect of a change of wind, with a rapidly decreasing supply of medicine, and a prospect of their falling short entirely, Capt. Chauncey determined to exercise the discretion vested is him, and put the ship under steam, and seek a southern latitude more congenial to the negroes. In taking this course Capt. Changeey was actuated solely by the convictions of his judgment, and by a conscientious desire to discharge faithfully a very responsible daty. It was expected that the Niagara would leave Porto Grande in the course of the next twenty-four hours. After landing the neamongst us the legitimate successors of the grees on the coast, the vessel would stop at Monrovia for coal, and return direct to the United States.
